The U.S. Senate held a hearing to address two issues facing the nation's armed service academies--honor systems and sexual harassment. This was the first of several oversight hearings to be held regarding the service academies. Two events prompted the Senate to hold these hearings: (1) a cheating scandal at the U.S. Naval Academy that began in 1992; and (2) the publication of a U.S. General Accounting Office (GAO) report in 1994 entitled "DOD Service Academies: More Action Needed to Eliminate Sexual Harassment." The Hearing consisted of the presentations of three panels to the Subcommittee on Force Requirements and Personnel. The first panel, consisting of U.S. Ambassador Richard Armitage and Vice Admiral David M. Bennett, discussed the cheating scandal at the U.S. Naval Academy. The second panel, made up of GAO personnel, summarized the findings of their 1994 report on sexual harassment. The superintendents of the three service academies comprised the final panel. They discussed honor systems and sexual harassment at their institutions and the steps the academies had made to address these issues. The hearing document includes the presentations of all three panels as well as text from the GAO report and the "Report of the Honor Review Committee to the Secretary of the Navy On Honor at the United States Naval Academy." Presents a study guide for preparing for entry-level civil service job tests along with four practice exams and answers. This volume presents the results of a study to find the best methods for law enforcement agencies to use in selecting investigators and evaluating their performance. The report is written for detective supervisors and managers, personnel department heads, and attorneys who deal with equal employment opportunity litigation. Information gathering for the study included interviews with personnel in a dozen police jurisdictions throughout the United States. Key elements of the selection process, the authors found, are fairness, validity, job relatedness, utility, and efficiency. While college study and past job performance (including rates of conviction) were good indicators of future investigative performance, written civil service examinations and tests for verbal ability were the only factors that achieved the validity standards for job relatedness required under most EEO regulations.
